

Dragon Fire Cupping is widely used throughout the world as a way of removing or circulating areas of congestion and stagnation. In fire cupping a partial vacuum is created with heated glass jars, which are applied to the skin, drawing up the underlying tissues and blood stasis. It is an excellent treatment for those who have recently contracted a cold or flu and for muscle tension throughout the body. $60 for a 30 minute stand-alone treatment - or $50 as an add-on to another service

Gua Sha is a technique commonly used in Asia by practitioners of Traditional Medicine. With gua sha, the skin is pressured in strokes by a round-edged instrument. In biomedical terms, it extravasates congested blood and waste congesting in the surface tissues and muscles, promoting normal circulation and increased metabolic processes. By resolving fluid and blood stasis, gua sha is valuable in the treatment of pain, acute infectious illness, upper respiratory and digestive problems, and many chronic diseases. -- $60 for a 30 minute stand-alone treatment - or $50 as an add-on to another service
